Polaroid - hurricane of the mind

by reid_simp

Summary

Will's poetic internal monologue through some of his time in the BSHCI, or rather my poetic interpretation of it.

Notes

so i wrote this in my creative writing club at school, and thought it was ao3 worthy. it's basically the thought in will's head; the doubt that perhaps it could've been him that killed everyone, including Abigail, and what that does to his psyche.
i fucking love writing poetry

Tightness in my chest,
a twisting storm.
Thunder, rain batters me.
Tight around my head.
Was just a thought,
an if or maybe. Tightness reminds me of what was.

Same walls day and night.
Cackling through cracks.
Straight thoughts gone
to the madness
of one's mind as a reminder of a thought.

Burning head, reminder
of a brain once was.
Reminder of the thought,
forgetting all the others.

A sceptre, a reminder
of a plague in my head.
Reminder of a hurricane,
hurricane of the mind.

Houses wrecked, towns
blended together.
Families shattered into the ground, into another world where hurricanes
aren't normal.

Plague in my head, a reminder of a thing rotten.
Remind of the blackness,
the deep unknown.

Scarcity of thoughts,
beyond three walls and bars.
The sentences blur together
like a hurricane,
A hurricane of the mind.

A black hole of the mind,
scarce thoughts blending
space and time melting
to the reminder of a thought.
